

What is software? What is the different between Utility software and system software?

- Software is the programs and routines for a computer or the program material for an electronic device which make it run. Without an software electrical devices such as computer is useless and makes it impossible to create an artificial intelligence. Examples of software are MS Word, Excel, etc. There is two types of software Utility software and system software a.k.a application software.

The difference between utility software and system software is given below:

Utility software	System software
A program that aims to perform specific tasks that help in making the device work better.	A computer-based program that is designed to perform some tasks grouped together.
Either comes pre-installed or downloaded from the web.	Always downloaded from the internet.
The size is small.	The size is big.
It is mostly free.	It is either free or paid.
Example : Avast, AVG, etc.	Example : VLC, word, etc.